Chris Colclasure

Chris helps his clients win permits to build natural resource development projects and keep them running. He frequently appears before state boards and commissions. He draws on his experience in private practice, Colorado's Air Pollution Control Division, and the federal government to obtain regulatory approval and develop cost-effective options for complying with environmental standards.

As a prominent air quality lawyer in Colorado and the west, Chris guided oil and gas clients through the development of the state's most significant air quality regulations. He finds creative strategies for industry to operate successfully in tough regulatory atmospheres, including voluntary measures to avoid regulations. He brought flexibility to Colorado's ozone State Implementation Plan (SIP), storage vessel emission control standards, emissions monitoring rules, and nearly every major Colorado air quality rulemaking from the adoption of a precedent-setting methane leak detection and repair (LDAR) program in 2014 through the ongoing greenhouse gas (GHG) reduction rules.

Chris served in the United States Air Force Judge Advocate General's (JAG) Corps, where he represented federal agencies in electric utility rate cases in Oklahoma and Alaska. He represented industry clients including a solar energy trade association in regulatory matters before the Colorado Public Utilities Commission.

Chris knows first-hand how government agencies function, establish goals, interact with stakeholders, and measure success. He leverages this insider's perspective to find innovative solutions that accommodate the needs of his clients and their regulators.

Officer's Forum—President

Hello DAPL Community,

I'm excited to write everyone as the 2024-2025 DAPL President. First, I would like to thank our past president, Gil Guethlein, and all our committee chairs, volunteers, and sponsors. Additionally, I would like to thank Tabatha Reed, our Office Manager, who has been instrumental in the success of the DAPL. So much has changed in our industry since I started my oil and gas career in 2005. With that being said, I have spent the last few months reaching out to members and getting feedback on what is working and not working within the DAPL and what changes members would like to see. Based on the feedback I received, my initiatives this year are to implement a more inclusive approach to all aspects of land professionals, accommodate our ever-changing demographics, and focus on charities and community outreach that our members are genuinely passionate about. After each event, we will have a quick survey via a QR code that you can give us feedback. Undoubtedly, our member input is the most valuable resource we gain access to. We rely on each of you to carry out our mission and objectives. We need feedback and WE NEED YOU to get involved. You all can make such a difference and impact on the organization. No matter your time commitment level, we have something for everyone. Please get in touch with DAPL if you have any questions or are interested in joining a committee or the board.

From a Legal Perspective

From Presumption to Law: Mineral Ownership Under Colorado Roads and Rights-of-Way

The Colorado Supreme Court's recent ruling in Great Northern Properties LLLP v. Extraction Oil and Gas Inc. et al. (2022SC805) provided much-needed clarity regarding ownership of minerals underlying roads and other rights-of-way in Colorado. It was a significant win for the oil and gas industry and landowners across the state.

For over a century, Colorado courts followed the “centerline presumption” a rule of conveyance providing that a “conveyance of land abutting a highway or street is presumed to carry title to the center of that roadway to the extent that the grantor has any interest therein, unless a contrary intent appears on the face of the conveyance.”¹ Through the years, Colorado courts applied this presumption broadly, and title examiners and land professionals relied on this case law to credit property owners with minerals to the centerline of abutting roads. However, before Great Northern, no Colorado case explicitly addressed whether minerals were included in the “bundle of sticks” passing under the presumption.

At issue in Great Northern was the ownership of minerals underlying a dedicated road right-of-way adjacent to subdivided lands conveyed by a developer in the 1970s. The 1970s deeds were silent as to the ownership of the right-of-way. In 2019, the developer conveyed its mineral rights underlying the right-of-way to Great Northern Properties, LLLP, who then filed an action against the owners of the adjacent parcels and Extraction Oil & Gas, Inc. to quiet title in the minerals and associated royalties under the road. Great Northern asserted that the centerline presumption only applied to the surface estate. Extraction argued that the presumption applied to all interests owned by the developer in the dedicated lands at the time of the conveyance, including minerals.

Although the acreage of the roads in Great Northern may have been minimal, the decision had significant implications for the thousands of acres of dedicated rights-of-way in Colorado subdivisions now accessible by current horizontal drilling methods. A ruling that the centerline presumption did not include minerals would have also impacted a myriad of existing wells and spacing units, requiring a reallocation of thousands of acres of mineral interests and associated royalties across the state from landowners to developers and costly revisions to title opinions and divisions of interest. In addition, identifying and leasing the successors to the original developers – many of whom are defunct corporations or deceased individuals – would be a monumental undertaking.

Ultimately, the Colorado Supreme Court ruled in favor of Extraction Oil & Gas, Inc., holding that the centerline presumption applies if the party claiming an interest in mineral rights under a right-of-way establishes the following:

- (1) The grantor conveyed ownership of the land abutting a right-of-way;
- (2) The grantor owned the fee – to both the surface estate and mineral rights – underlying the right-of-way at the time of the conveyance; and
- (3) No contrary intent appears on the face of the conveyance document.

The Court clarified that the presumption applies whether a right-of-way is statutorily dedicated or dedicated by common law. Further, the Court held that the mineral interest passes to the grantee at the time of the conveyance and is not dependent on the grantor's divestment of all neighboring parcels.

Cheers to Joe Pierzchala, Sam Bacon, and their talented legal team for successfully arguing this case. I know title examiners will miss drafting and landmen will miss reading long-winded title comments on this issue.

Ainsley Harris - University of Wyoming

My name is Ainsley Harris. I am a junior at The University of Wyoming. My major is Energy Resources Management and Development with a focus on Professional Land Management. I grew up in Erie, Colorado riding horses and enjoying nature. As a result, making sure that we meet energy demands while also protecting our environment is an important topic to me.

Corrine Worthington - Texas Tech University

Corinne Worthington is heading into her senior year at Texas Tech University as an Energy Commerce Major. At Tech, she is very involved in the College of Business, where she serves as a Rawls Ambassador and a Mentor for underclassmen in Energy Commerce. She is a member of the Scovell Business Leadership Program and serves as Vice President of the Dean's Student Council. Outside of school, Corinne plays a lot of ping pong, and she is getting ready to return to ConocoPhillips for a second internship with the Land Team.

Rebecca Stankiewicz - Western Colorado University

As one of the recipients of this year's Denver Association of Professional Landmen Scholarship, I am honored to continue a family tradition in the land and energy sectors. With my grandfather being a foreman and my father being a geologist working in the Permian Basin, I have developed a deep respect for our profession and a commitment to sustainable practices. In an era of significant change within our industry, I am focused on integrating traditional land management with modern conservation strategies prioritizing energy security, economy, and environment. Thank you to the DAPL for this scholarship, which not only aids my education at Western Colorado University but also strengthens my resolve to contribute positively to our community and uphold the ethical standards of our profession.
